The first few trips home from college can feel unexpectedly new or unfamiliar in some ways — home might feel different from before and unlike life at UVa. Thinking about what going home will be like for both you and your family helps you prepare.

"Going home for the holidays can be very different after your first semester of college, especially because of the freedom you have at school. Often your family will have different expectations about your time at home, so give your family and yourself the opportunity to explain how things may have changed while you were gone. The key is to be willing to discuss ways to mediate, both of your interests!"
K. L., CLAS 2015

"Since you started college, you have probably changed a bit, so be prepared for your high school friends to have experienced similar change. It's not a bad thing, just be open to the change."
S. S., Ed School 2016

"People will probably ask what your major is or if you've decided, have heard this question a million times, or are too busy discovering yourself to be discovering anybody else. Relax. They just want to hear about how you've been doing. Prepare some stories about classes, social events, or extracurriculars to pull out of your back pocket."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"One night I went out with a friend, and around midnight my mom called, but I didn't see it. Eventually I saw her messages and called her back, and she told me she was worried I had been attacked by a werewolf! Moral of the story: keep your phone on you at all times, and check out community activities."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"You don't have to wear flip flops in the shower. Revel in it."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"People will probably ask what your major is or if you've decided, have heard this question a million times, or are too busy discovering yourself to be discovering anybody else. Relax. They just want to hear about how you've been doing. Prepare some stories about classes, social events, or extracurriculars to pull out of your back pocket."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"Since you started college, you have probably changed a bit, so be prepared for your high school friends to have experienced similar change. It's not a bad thing, just be open to the change."
S. S., Ed School 2016

"People will probably ask what your major is or if you've decided, have heard this question a million times, or are too busy discovering yourself to be discovering anybody else. Relax. They just want to hear about how you've been doing. Prepare some stories about classes, social events, or extracurriculars to pull out of your back pocket."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"One night I went out with a friend, and around midnight my mom called, but I didn't see it. Eventually I saw her messages and called her back, and she told me she was worried I had been attacked by a werewolf! Moral of the story: keep your phone on you at all times, and check out community activities."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"You don't have to wear flip flops in the shower. Revel in it."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"Going home for the holidays can be very different after your first semester of college, especially because of the freedom you have at school. Often your family will have different expectations about your time at home, so give your family and yourself the opportunity to explain how things may have changed while you were gone. The key is to be willing to discuss ways to mediate, both of your interests!"
K. L., CLAS 2015

"Since you started college, you have probably changed a bit, so be prepared for your high school friends to have experienced similar change. It's not a bad thing, just be open to the change."
S. S., Ed School 2016

"People will probably ask what your major is or if you've decided, have heard this question a million times, or are too busy discovering yourself to be discovering anybody else. Relax. They just want to hear about how you've been doing. Prepare some stories about classes, social events, or extracurriculars to pull out of your back pocket."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"One night I went out with a friend, and around midnight my mom called, but I didn't see it. Eventually I saw her messages and called her back, and she told me she was worried I had been attacked by a werewolf! Moral of the story: keep your phone on you at all times, and check out community activities."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"You don't have to wear flip flops in the shower. Revel in it."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"Going home for the holidays can be very different after your first semester of college, especially because of the freedom you have at school. Often your family will have different expectations about your time at home, so give your family and yourself the opportunity to explain how things may have changed while you were gone. The key is to be willing to discuss ways to mediate, both of your interests!"
K. L., CLAS 2015

"Since you started college, you have probably changed a bit, so be prepared for your high school friends to have experienced similar change. It's not a bad thing, just be open to the change."
S. S., Ed School 2016

"People will probably ask what your major is or if you've decided, have heard this question a million times, or are too busy discovering yourself to be discovering anybody else. Relax. They just want to hear about how you've been doing. Prepare some stories about classes, social events, or extracurriculars to pull out of your back pocket."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"One night I went out with a friend, and around midnight my mom called, but I didn't see it. Eventually I saw her messages and called her back, and she told me she was worried I had been attacked by a werewolf! Moral of the story: keep your phone on you at all times, and check out community activities."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"You don't have to wear flip flops in the shower. Revel in it."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"Going home for the holidays can be very different after your first semester of college, especially because of the freedom you have at school. Often your family will have different expectations about your time at home, so give your family and yourself the opportunity to explain how things may have changed while you were gone. The key is to be willing to discuss ways to mediate, both of your interests!"
K. L., CLAS 2015

"Since you started college, you have probably changed a bit, so be prepared for your high school friends to have experienced similar change. It's not a bad thing, just be open to the change."
S. S., Ed School 2016

"People will probably ask what your major is or if you've decided, have heard this question a million times, or are too busy discovering yourself to be discovering anybody else. Relax. They just want to hear about how you've been doing. Prepare some stories about classes, social events, or extracurriculars to pull out of your back pocket."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"One night I went out with a friend, and around midnight my mom called, but I didn't see it. Eventually I saw her messages and called her back, and she told me she was worried I had been attacked by a werewolf! Moral of the story: keep your phone on you at all times, and check out community activities."
T. H., CLAS 2016

"You don't have to wear flip flops in the shower. Revel in it."
T. H., CLAS 2016